Steve Culbertson
Retired, Business Executive

Steve Culbertson is a retired business executive. Steve created a firm called Snappy Lube in June of 1979. He was first to bring the quick lube concept to Cincinnati. He was instrumental in developing a quick lube association. The initial purpose of the association was to lobby congress against classifying used oil as a hazardous waste. It grew into an information center to educate independent and franchised quick lube dealers.

Steve sold his firm to Ashland Oil in 1989 and became soccer coach and baseball coach to his two young children. In 1995 he joined the firm of Dixie Dew Products. The second and third generation owners felt they needed his help. The company was returned to profitability and Steve sold his stock back in 2007 so it could remain a family run business.

Steve is on the parish counsel of St. Rose Church. He is married to Gina, and enjoys sailing and golf.
